BY AN OLD-TIMER.

No. 16.

By an easy transition from subjects not pleasant to contemplate, but which the writer could not ignore, and yet be a faithful chronicler of events, to those more congenial to his feelings, reference is next had to the county's representation in the General Assemblies of Kentucky since the year 1806. The names enrolled will serve to remind some, and inform others, of those who have been instructed to make laws for the government of the people. These names are recorded at Frankfort, and they may yet be upon the pages of unwritten history. They are as follows:

Charles Polk, 1806-7; William Hardin, 1810-13; John Sterrett, 1811-24-25; Joseph Huston, 1813, died in office and vacancy filled by Wm. Hardin; James Moorman, 1814-15-16; Edward Chew, 1817-18; Robert Stephens, 1819; David R. Murray, 1820-21-22; David Stephens, 1826; Anselm Watkins, 1827-8; John Calhoun, 1829-30-40; Jefferson Jennings, 1832; Henry Washington, 1837; Alfred Allen, 1838; Ben Smithers, 1841-2; Charles Hambleton, 1843-4; Joseph T. Smith, 1845-6; Nathaniel S. Lightfoot, 1847; Joseph A. McClarty, 1848; John B. Bruner, 1849-50; Joshua H. Thomas, 1851-3; Thomas Alexander, 1853-5; Gideon P. Jolly, 1855-7; William A. Barton, 1857-9; David C. Gannaway, 1859-61; Alfred Allen, 1861-67, but elected State Treasurer in 1866 and succeeded in the Legislature by Charles Allen, 1867-69; John Allen Murray, 1869-71; Dudley Hambleton, 1869-71; Jonas D. Wilson, 1871-3; Thomas M. Miller, 1873-5; J. W. Drury, 1875-6; Thomas J. Lewis, 1877-8; R. R. Pierce, 1879-80; Green W. Beard, 1881-2; E. R. Pennington, 1883-4; Charles Blandford, 1885-8; Tice Jolly, 1889-90.

David R. Murray was elected State Senator while a resident of Hawesville, subsequently removed temporarily to Colorado during the excitement regarding the rich mines discovered there, but did not resign his position as Senator, and was recognized at Frankfort during the session as the "Senator from Colorado."

Hon. Lufe Green, of Falls of Rough, was subsequently State Senator one term, succeeded by Dr. Byers, of Grayson county, and the position is now being filled by James S. Wortham, of Leitchfield.

The farm on Long Lick, the late residence of Thomas J. Lewis, deceased, was owned and occupied successively by Mr. Anselm Watkins, Dr. J. H. Thomas, and Mr. Lewis, and each one of these represented the county in the Legislature. It might be a good investment for some aspiring gentleman to buy that farm and thus place himself in the line of safe precedents for political preference.

Of the Representatives named, fifteen were residents of Hardinsburg, four of Cloverport, five from the Long Lick section, three from the Bewleyville section, two from Holt's Bottom, two from Quality Corner, two from the upper part of the county, two from the Union Star section, one from Clover Creek, and two from other sections. The average term of service is something over two years, although a number served longer, but it will be remembered that previous to the adoption of the present Constitution, sessions were held annually.

Previous to the election of Representatives in 1877, the "Grange" movement had taken shape—an organization somewhat similar to the present Farmers' Alliance. A long period of depression had existed and the farmers concluded to make some effort to better their condition—a proceeding of the greatest importance, and certainly demanded by every consideration. Accordingly steps were taken on this new idea; radical measures were proposed and to a considerable extent carried into effect; middle men were to be knocked out, buying all to be done from first hands; "Grange Stores" were opened in towns and different neighborhoods in the country, on the co-operative plan; old merchants were ignored by many, notwithstanding these same merchants had supplied them with food and clothing on credit for years. These and many other matters introduced in the interest of reform, it was hoped, would soon bring about better times.

As a result of these things, a majority perhaps of Grangers were elected to the Legislature next succeeding session of 1877-9; at any rate they had sufficient strength to shape business to suit their ideas, and it was known as the "Grange" Legislature. They reduced taxes, in the interest of the farmer, it was supposed, but, singularly enough, neglected to reduce expenses at the same time—even collected in full the usual price for their own services; including mileage and stationery. The result was a deficit in the treasury, which the next Legislature—session of 1879-80—was called on to provide for by increasing the taxes again and reducing salaries, fees and other expenses. Much of this curtailing of expenses was did away with by the succeeding meeting of the General Assembly. In the meantime the Grange movement had been found not to work well; bickerings and dissensions arose; Granges differed as to the course to be pursued about various things; stores were not properly conducted; and finally the Grange was forced to give way to the old order of things.

But the prospects of the farmer have not improved. Everything raised for market has been compelled to sell at unremunerating prices, while paying high for what he buys. With debts piling up, mortgages increasing, and wanting staring him in the face, it is not strange that he hopes by another move, now made, to extricate himself from these troubles. This time it is the Farmers' Alliance—an improvement, let us hope, upon the Grange move, but similar to it in many respects. It remains to be seen whether or not it will share the fate of its predecessor. We truly hope it may better the farmer's condition, but already there are indications of disagreement among themselves that bodes no good for the order.

One mistake appears common to various organizations—that is, running them into politics. The Alliance is no exception, and yet there is surely patriotism and sound principles in one or the other of the two great political parties sufficient to appreciate the needs of the farmer and laboring classes generally, and make laws accordingly. The creation of a third party will not avail. Elected to office good, honest men, competent to discharge the duties thereof; hold them to strict accountability in every respect; see that they are faithful to their trusts, and the interests of all—not of a class—will be promoted. Politics, when lugged in out of place, is the bane of all organizations for ameliorating the condition of mankind.

The writer has witnessed the rise and fall of societies which, but for the mixture of politics, might have accomplished much good. Temperance societies were at one time very popular, and it was understood that there were to be no politics in it, and yet no sooner than able to stand alone, it must be associated with politics; its downfall was a natural consequence. Teetotalism followed in its wake, but to be stranded upon the same rock. Prohibition, as at present conducted, will fare no better. Extremists do not have the patience requisite to accomplish great reforms; people must be educated up to these salient points.

What moral suasion fails to effect, it is poorly worth while to attempt by coercion. In the beginning good and evil were set before men; they chose evil rather than good, because their deeds were evil. Teach them so that they may "cease to do evil and learn to do good," and this by degrees; don't aim to reform everything at once; don't look for perfection in anything. There are too many societies, in the church and out of the church, which causes divided effort, each tending to weaken or antagonize the other, whereas "in union there is strength." Concentrated effort, moral suasion, in place of divided councils, enforced morality. The law punishes offenders, but does not make men honest.

If you've got a pain or ache or a bruise, Salvation Oil will reach the case instantly. Price 25 cents.

Attention Voters.—By resolution passed by our Legislature, all good citizens are requested to use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and recommend same as the people's remedy for coughs, colds, etc. 25 cents.

Gen. Johnston's Death.

Philadelphia Times: Johnston was an able man, a brave officer, a high-toned gentleman and thoroughly honest and upright in every walk of life. He outlived the animosities of the war and was honored by men of all parties.

Chicago Herald: By reason of his courteous manners and fine abilities, no less than as a result of his patriotic acceptance of the changed conditions brought about by the war, he came to be highly regarded at the North as well as at the South.

Chicago Times: When the war was over Gen. Johnston urged his friends to return to their homes and make the best effort to undo the evils of the past. Having fought bravely for his section, and having been fairly conquered, he threw the weight of his personality into the scale for a restoration of the Union and the burial of all bitterness.

St. Louis Globe Democrat: History will undoubtedly place him the most conspicuous place next to Lee among the Confederate commanders in the late war. It will, at least, be said that if his plans had been carried out two of the great campaigns of the war—that of Vicksburg and that of Atlanta—might not have been as successful to the Union side as they were.

Indianapolis News: It was a tribute to his character, a testimony to his great courtesy and gentle dignity that he could thus win and preserve his place in the quarter of a century that he survived the great rebellion. Peace to his ashes. On fame's eternal camping ground he will have a place and welcome among the brave soldier comrades that have gone before.

TERRELL

Continues Her Interesting Sketch of Her Journey From Salt Lake.

Mr. Editor.—I have left my travelers in Salt Lake City so long I am afraid they have forgotten their own identity, but circumstances have been such I could not resume the journey at an earlier date. We left Salt Lake City one morning at 11 o'clock and reached Denver at 8 the next evening. The scenery on the Rio Grande Western R. R. is almost indescribable, and I am sure it would require a much abler pen than mine to give you even a faint idea of its beauty and grandeur. We stopped in Ogden about twenty minutes, but of course saw little of the main part of the city. A loquacious porter informed us that most of the inhabitants between Ogden and Grand Junction were Mormons. Quite a number of the inhabitants of this region live in dugouts or underground houses. We saw several that seemed miles away from any other habitation, and imagined their owners hermits who had become sequestered against humanity in general and sought seclusion where he could commune with nature and have only animals as companions. We pitied him in his loneliness, and wondered why so many men become sequestered against the world. Is it the fault of the world or of the man? Others of these dugouts would have children swarming about the doors, evincing happiness within; truly love in a cottage.

We stopped for awhile in a little mining town up in the mountains, and saw the cars loaded with coal coming out of the mines. It was just before sunset and many of the miners were on their homeward way, all soot-begrimed, but whistling merrily, for in many cases the good wife was standing in the door of their humble home with a rollicking baby in her arms waiting to welcome the father. The little village seemed full of women and children, and a healthy, hardy looking set they were. The sun was quite low when we viewed Castle Rock, rendering it even more weird in appearance. It is a massive pile of rock hundreds of feet high, and looks like the pictured ruins of some old castle, hence its name. We watched the sun set and the last glimmer of day fade into nothingness, and sighed to think sight-seeing was over for that day. We took the narrow gauge at 11:30 p. m. at Grand Junction. We were up by daylight the next morning ready to view the beauties of Black Canyon, which we entered about 5 o'clock. The scenery through the canon is rather awe-inspiring, but I think all the adjectives in the English language were exhausted in our efforts to express our admiration. Huge rocks hundreds of feet high towered on either side, and great boulders would project out over the track seemingly ready at any moment to fall and crush us. The rocks were varied in color and of many queer shapes. At times the rocks would diminish in size on one side of the canon, then we would have a view of many-hued foliage, queer looking plants and a few wild flowers. The Colorado river winds its way through this canon, and is a beautiful stream, sometimes smooth and calm, and you can almost imagine you see the mountain trout sporting around, then again rushing over rocks, bubbling and whirling and in haste to be gone.

Just after leaving the canon old Sol made his appearance and gave us the benefit of his sun-lit countenance. A clear sunrise is always beautiful, but viewed, as we did that, from a mountain with no moving object in sight except our train and its passengers, and no habitation near, it seemed to possess even a greater grandeur. Perhaps we were inclined to regard it that way because our views of the sun were usually taken some time after he made his first appearance. Running a road successfully through this region is certainly a great piece of engineering and mechanical skill. The road winds in a zig-zag fashion up the mountain, sometimes forming almost a perfect horse shoe. There were three loops at one part of the road, and in making the ascent we could look back and see the track in three different places that we had passed over. We passed through miles of snow sheds and pine forests. The mountain is covered with tall pine trees. Before entering the Arkansas or Grand Canon, an observation car was attached to our train and we all took seats on that, which enabled us to get a much better view of the canon. This canon is even more beautiful than the Black Canon—the rocks higher and more varied in coloring.

A Scotchman on board the car went into ecstasies over the scenery; said we had no ancient ruins or castles to boast of, but our natural scenery surpassed anything in Scotland. The highest rock in Grand Canon towers 2,100 feet above the track. We passed over the Swing Bridge, also in this canon; it is swung from the rocks on either side, and has no support from below. Marshall's Pass is the highest point reached, the altitude being 10,856 feet. It is here that any one with very weak lungs experiences such difficulty in breathing. Several persons in advanced stages of consumption have died at this point.

After leaving Marshall's Pass our next point of interest was Pike's Peak. We had a very good view of it; also witnessed a snow storm some distance from us. Colorado City is quite attractive as viewed from the depot, but we did not stop long enough to take in the beauties of the town. We reached Denver at 3 p. m. We had to possess our souls in patience and await the morning before taking in the sights of this wonderful city. Our tours around the city were more limited here, owing to the severe illness of one of our party; still we managed to see much to admire. I think Denver the prettiest city I have ever visited. The streets are broad and a good system of street railway all over the city. Elegant homes are numerous, and the business blocks are substantial and handsome—stone figures extensively in the buildings, and much red stone used. We visited Ellich's Garden, the Tabor Grand Opera House, and various other places of interest, and indulged in street car rides all over the principal lines. We said good-bye to Denver, feeling that we had left much unseen.

We traveled through Nebraska almost the entire day before reaching Kansas City. Some portions of the country were beautiful and some of the towns thrifty looking, but many of the little towns were a slack, down-at-the-heel appearance, and were adorned with very few substantial looking houses. When we reached Kansas City, our relatives and friends gave us a hearty welcome, and we were only too glad to accept of their kind hospitality and rest after our long journey. I am fond of Kansas City; there is so much enterprise, push, and go there. She is indeed a bustling city, and though the cry of hard times is heard now, I think she will soon pull through with flying colors. Gov. Crittenden has an elegant, spacious home there on First Avenue, and I am told he dispenses hospitality in true Kentucky style. Kansas City has a thorough system of cable and electric cars.

After several delightful weeks spent in that delightful city, I left for Decatur, Ill., for a short stay. Decatur is a thriving city, surrounded by a fertile and lovely country. While there I called upon Mr. Robert Clary and family. Mr. Clary is an old resident of Meade, where his boyhood was spent. I reached Louisville the day of the great Democratic victory, Nov. 4th. When I found myself once more in the dear old State, my heart gave a throb of joy, and it was sweet to breathe the atmosphere of home once more.
